Fueled by a passion to share new music that engages conductors, ensembles, and audiences alike, Michael John Trotta (b.1978) is fast becoming one of the most "exciting and prominent new composers of choral music." Drawing on his experience as a conductor and clinician, he brings artistry and excellence within reach for thousands of musicians each year. From Carnegie Hall to classrooms all over the world, Trotta's unique blend of engaging and artistic music creates opportunities to experience new music and empowers individuals to realize their artistic potential. His engaging style fuses tradition and innovation to create moments of beauty that "effectively carry out a dialogue between the [music] and the modern listener." (Choral Journal) Prior to his work as a full-time composer, his experience as an educator at the elementary, middle school, high school, and university levels - as well as a church music director - infuses his works with "an intimate knowledge of the human voice" and a "rare sensitivity to the capabilities of a choral ensemble." This, combined with his degrees in music education and a doctorate in choral conducting, have grounded his style in tradition, which blend with his modern sensibilities to "inform the thoughts and aspirations of the people and the time" (Choral Scholar) and to create "tender harmonies and a palette of glowing vocal and instrumental colors." One advantage of holding money in an individual retirement account (IRA) is that a creditor cannot garnish or levy an IRA to collect a judgment. When the account owner dies, the account passes on to her designated beneficiary. The account owner's creditors cannot levy the account for the deceased owner's debts, but state law and the beneficiary's relationship to the deceased determine whether a creditor can get to an inherited IRA to pay the debts of the beneficiary. Creditors cannot garnish or levy an IRA that belonged to the deceased to pay the debts of the deceased. The law protects an IRA from creditors in life, and it also protects the IRA from creditors in death. While other assets and debts of the deceased are subject to probate, where a judge may order the deceased's assets to be sold to pay debts, an IRA passes directly to the named beneficiary on the account without going through probate. If the deceased owner of the IRA was the beneficiary's spouse, the account is safe from seizure by the surviving spouse's creditors. Even if the surviving spouse declares bankruptcy, creditors cannot touch the individual retirement account that the surviving spouse inherited. A spouse who receives an IRA from a deceased spouse can rollover the funds into an IRA in the surviving spouse's name, protect the funds from creditors and defer paying taxes on the funds until the surviving spouse starts making withdrawals from the account. Beneficiaries who inherit an IRA from a parent, sibling, relative or friend may not be able to protect the account from creditors, especially if the recipient beneficiary declares bankruptcy. State law determines whether you can protect an inherited IRA from creditors. At the time of publication, at least nine states specifically shield inherited IRAs from collection action. In some states, such as Florida, courts have held that creditors can levy an inherited IRA for the beneficiary's debt. In other states, such as New York, courts have not yet decided the issue. If an IRA owner names her estate as her beneficiary, the account will go through probate, where a judge will probably order that the IRA be liquidated to pay the debts of the deceased and be distributed among the heirs of the deceased. However, if an IRA owner names an irrevocable trust as her beneficiary, creditors cannot garnish or levy the trust assets. As a beneficiary takes distributions from the trust, those distributions become the beneficiary's property, and creditors can seize the distributions to pay debts.
